"Film for Social Change - Making the Invisible Visible"

Are we aware of the story of the tomato we somehow eat every day? What or who might be behind the story of the tomato? There are some people, actually a significant population, putting their lives at risk for our life, but we do not see them. How can we see them then? How can film make a change? This conference invites you to discover answers through discussions and films. You will be surprised with the results.

Visualizing Humanitarian Crises - The Syrian Crisis Case

Have we ever sympathized with refugees besides the ongoing media flashes and 30-second news pieces? When we call someone a refugee, what do we understand from this? Can we visualize their journey, their needs, their expectations? Or, do we simply consume them as news stories and make them disappear from agenda as it happens today? Is a humanitarian crisis limited to the subject matter? How can visuals play a particular role in the host country while they cover the humanitarian crisis? More importantly, how and what kind of roles institutions like universities can have during humanitarian crises? All these questions will be discussed and tried to unfold while discussing and watching the films.
